Want Canadian Recorder

A petition has been in circulation this week, asking the Canadian authorities to appoint a recorder of mines at this place to take care of the mines recording for the lower Stikine and Iskut rivers. The impression seems to be that the next year or two will witness considerable interest in mining in the Canadian territory adjacent to this place. To help this along by saving prospectors the trip up the river to record their discoveries is the object of having a recorder appointed at Wrangell. Bart Daly of the Unik River mining company was recently appointed at Ketchikan, and there is every reason to believe that some local man will be able to land the appointment here in Wrangell. In case there is any influx of prospectors, the creation of a recording office here will mean much to the local merchants as the miners will naturally outfit here if they have to come here to do their recording.

Jurymen From Wrangell

Following is the list of Wrangell citizens who were drawn last week to serve on the grand and petit juries at the April term of court at Ketchikan. Grand Jury to appear April 4 at 10 o'clock—Maurice Healy, William Taylor, Wm. Cook, Orville Palmer, Adolph Engstrom, L. C. Patenaude, Chas. Nelson, Peter Anderson and John Kolb.

Petit jurors, to appear for duty April 7 at 10 o'clock—Fred Amundson, Aleck Vreath, F. H. Gray, John Schuler, N. J. Svindseth, Donald Sinclair and Bert Tucker.

L. T. Watson, well known to all the old timers of Wrangell, was a local visitor for several days this week. He is figuring on a trip into the interior, to go over the country between the Stikine and Naas Rivers.

The Redmen's dance Tuesday night was largely attended, and was a most enjoyable affair. The music was excellent.

Humboldt Back On Run

Bright and early Monday morning the staunch little steamer Humboldt tied up at the local wharf on her first trip of the season of 1910. The vessel has been completely overhauled, her furnishings in many respects have been renewed, a new cylinder head has been put on her high pressure cylinder and other repairs made to her machinery and equipment, with the result that she is in better shape than ever before since her launching. Her management has established rates which will probably be adopted by all the vessels on the run, as manager Kalish says that they are the ones she will operate under from now on. The first class fare between Seattle and this point has been fixed at $11.00, and the round trip for the tourist or other trade, Seattle to Skagway and return at $30.00. Freight will be carried between Seattle and Wrangell for $4.00 for ordinary, and $5.00 for perishables. The Humboldt will be operated on a 10 day schedule, calling at Wrangell both ways.

That old pipe of yours is fierce, better get a new one from Pat's.

Particulars can be had by addressing the customs office at Juneau. Applications for the examination must be in the hands of the officials not later than Saturday, March 12.

All bills and accounts due me I have placed in Charles Nelson's hands for collection, and a speedy settlement will oblige, BRUNO GREIF.

Billie Neil was a passenger home on the Cottage last week, and reports having had a very pleasant trip to the south.

Marshal Love of the third judicial district passed through on the Cottage, south bound.

Looking For His Dog

H. C. Drummond, for several years in the Mounted Police service in the Telegraph Creek district, but more recently located in Vancouver, was a Wrangell visitor last week. Something over a year ago, while coming down the Stikine river, he lost a valuable bear dog, and recently he heard that the dog had been seen, so he came up to see if he could locate it, but without success.

"Jack" Collins, one of Wrangell's old timers, was a local visitor for several days lately. He stated to The Sentinel man that he was north on government business and could not resist the temptation when in this region, to stop off at Wrangell and see his many friends here.

Bill Downing took a run down to Ketchikan on the Cottage and back on the Jefferson.

SAVE US FROM SUCH FRIENDS

It is almost incredible the amount of misinformation some people are able to absorb about some particular matter. Take for instance Congressman Sulzer and the question of "Home Rule" for Alaska. There can be no doubt that the gentleman from New York is in earnest and means every word he says on the subject, and still in spite of his desire to be candid and fair, in spite of the fact that he has had excellent opportunity to study this country of ours at short range, and notwithstanding the fact that he has property interests here in the north, he is as far off the track as it were possible for a man to be, and still be in the running.

His latest effusion shows this. Imagine, if you can, any man in his sane moments advocating the secession of the District of Alaska from the Union just because she, like a child, is refused a toy, self government, before she is old enough and developed enough to appreciate what she is asking for, and to use it if it were given to her.

Secede, indeed, if she be not allowed territorial government, rather should the gentleman advocate secession of Southeastern Alaska if Alaska be granted this precious boon, which can not but lead to her discomfort and dismay. There is no denying the fact that there is hardly a single permanent building in the whole of the district, outside of the towns on the coast, from the Aleutians south, Nome and the interior have been built simply for today, and there isn't a man in that entire region who expects to spend the balance of his days there. In this region different conditions prevail. Here are towns and homes, families and firesides, and here are men who expect to spend their lives here because this is "home" to them. The result is, the northern district and the interior have nothing in common with us. They have neither the knowledge of nor the interest in our welfare required to ally them with us to work for the common good. The result would be that if we were accorded that degree of home government Mr. Wickersham is now advocating, the northern districts would do the governing, while we of the southern seacoast would foot the bills. For one, the editor of this paper wishes to go on record as opposing any such movement. We don't want any form of home government we are not able to pay for, and just as surely we don't want any that some other fellow is going to foot the bills for. The result would be the same. No, if we must have a change, give us a form of government along some line similar to that of the Beveridge bill, and you advocates of Wickersham and his ideas, accept this bill as the entering point of the wedge which will give you as much home government as you will be able to digest, more would not agree with you. And during the interval, if you own even ten dollars worth of property in the district, look before you leap into the home rule eddy where Wickersham is swimming 'round and 'round and getting nowhere.

Martin Conway, who was appointed to succeed Judge LeFevre as court commissioner at Skagway, qualified for the office this week.

Southeastern Alaska is promised numerous aids to navigation in the spring.

A party of prospectors have gone to the headwaters of the Taku to investigate the reported placer strike there.

The Alaska Coast steamship Co. carried only $70,000 insurance on the steamer Kentucky, lost off Cape Hatteras, and will lose fully $50,000 by the wreck.

Here And There In The North

The Seattle P.-I. says that Delegate Wickersham has a "bug."

Seward boasts a lady graduate of the American School of Optometry.

A prospector named W. Hanson dropped a roll of bills amounting to $500 in a small stream near Seward and for several days was engaged in a futile effort to blast out the ice and recover it.

The Valdez-Fairbanks trail is once more in good condition and heavy traffic is reported as passing over it.

Arthur Baer, who ate his dogs about two years ago while suffering from a shortage of food while on the trail, is insane at Valdez and will be sent south on the next boat.

Dan McDonald, section foreman of the Copper River railroad near Cordova was struck by an engine and badly injured.

President Taft announces that he will be unable to visit Alaska in the spring as he had intended.

One of the first ordinances introduced in the Haines town council was one providing for proper protection against fire.

The steamer Henriette was blown nearly a hundred miles out of her course after leaving Prince Rupert recently and was forced to put in at Ketchikan.

The Royal Northwest Mounted Police who left Dawson January 17 are reported as making good headway in their march to Fort McPherson.

The coldest weather of the winter thus far is reported from Dawson on the fifth of the present month, when 56 below zero was recorded.

For the first time in several seasons the Nome Gold Digger is running a seven column paper this winter, thus contradicting the report that Nome is excessively dull.

A fire visited Skagway early this month doing close to $1000 damage.

Miller Creek, in the Sixty-Mile region is booming and good pay is reported in several places.

A cannery will be built this year at Hawk Inlet.

and soon was established as assistant to the receiving teller in a bank with a salary of $25 a week. With this and the money already in his possession he deemed himself rich, and his fitful optimism obtained the ascendancy once more in its usual extravagant form. But his escape from arrest had been a lesson that had sunk in deeply. He vowed never again under any circumstances to "borrow" from the funds he handled in the course of his duties. He eschewed horse racing also, knowing that if the bank officials became aware that he was gambling he would lose his place that very instant.

After awhile his fellow employees noticed that Brooks, the spy, genial Brooks, who had won the good will of everybody, as he had in the general office of the Latin-American Steamship company, manifested a tendency toward moroseness; that his face at times assumed an expression of melancholy. Despite his love of self, he was of those natures which do not thrive in solitude.

He never had cared much for the companionship of men. His inclination always had been toward that of the opposite sex. Accustomed also as he had been for so long to the consolations of home life, to the thoughtful, affectionate ministrations and bright presence of Emma, he was bound sooner or later to miss her.

"There's nothing in this living alone," the avowal came one night after he had spent an evening at the theater with two sociable fellow clerks and he gazed around his silent, cheerless bedroom. Although he had not at any time loved Emma with that ineffable passion which is the golden ladder upon which the soul mounts to heaven, yet she had filled a larger place in his heart than he had ever had any complete idea of prior to her absence. His sentiment, fostered by his selfishness, revived with violence under his introspection. He yearned for Emma's smile of greeting and the kiss that accompanied it at his homecoming, for the numberless sweet attentions she had lavished upon him.

How pretty she was, how gentle! How sweetly she had put up with his ill humor! She was different from any of the girls and women he had ever been acquainted with. He was sorry he had sent the photograph, not alone because he felt that he had made gratuitously a false move, but because he wished he had kept it for himself. There was not one personal object remaining that had belonged to her. The little ornaments she had liked, her clothes, the trinkets she had left behind, he had disposed of in his haste to get rid of everything that could recall her or to which she might lay claim.

He wondered if she, too, was sorry for their separation. She must be. How could she live under the eternal nagging and fault finding of her mother and the lording proclivities of Beth and not long to return to the independence of her own home?

She had loved him. His memory evoked the distant vision of her frail, lithe form clinging to him as she gazed up into his eyes, her own aglow with the glory of her adoration and its delicious intensity. He felt the blissful pulsations of her heart throbbing against him, its paeon of passion; he heard, too, in fancy the red lips murmur her soul's ecstasy in words of flame and beauty, felt the thrill that shivered through him as his fingers threaded caressingly the shimmering blond of her tresses. That was long ago in their early possession of each other, when she had awakened to knowledge of herself and had worshipped him as a god, fountalhead of joy and light for her on earth.

This transcendent passion had not found in him the responsiveness it craved and which alone could nourish it. Emma had been an enigma to him often, a riddle that had bored him at times. His blunted senses, sharpened by desire of her, perceived that stupidly, ignorantly, he had disclaimed a treasure beyond price.

But, remembering what he had been to her and that she was still his wife, he believed that a reconciliation could be brought about. Sentiment and desire took counsel with advisability; selfishness weighed the pros and cons. In the end sentiment and desire, being the stronger, adjusted objections to their own point of view. But even then it was some time before he could summon up courage enough to take any steps in the matter.

Summer had given place to winter and returned again since Emma had left him. In all that time he had not heard from or of her. He had made no attempt to see Jimmy Smith or any of his former friends and associates.

Now he bent his thoughts upon how best to effect the rapprochement. Should he write Emma, expressing his contrition and begging her forgiveness? His pride stiffened at this proposition. Should he write and request an interview with her? If he could see her he believed he would have little trouble in persuading her. But, counseled by her hateful mother, who always had despised him, she might refuse to see him. Perhaps the best way would be to approach her through some one else. The only person he knew of who by any possibility could act as intermediary was Jimmy Smith, the general utility man.

Requisitioning Jimmy's services did not appeal to him. He had long been jealous of his prosperity and of the fact that he had once been a suitor for Emma's hand, although jealousy on account of the latter circumstance was rather the outcome of envy of his success in business. Nevertheless Jimmy was indispensable, and the more Brooks realized this the higher became the degree of favor to which he restored him. It had been bad policy not to keep in touch with Jimmy, a serious mistake. Smith, however, was such an "easy," obliging, warm hearted fellow that there would be no difficulty in squaring things with him and getting him to act as go-between. He resolved to call on Jimmy.

CHAPTER XIX.

DESTINY is a strange thing. Under many a quiet exterior smolder fires of volcanic passion that never are fanned into activity because the essential puff of cause has never stirred them. Jimmy Smith had had conceptions of comfort and life on a large scale that he had never attempted to carry out for the reason that the one thing upon which they were based, the one incentive, was lacking—a wife. Given wealth and a woman responsive in the same degree to the profound devotion and large ideas of which he was capable, Smith might have developed into a magnificent nabob, a great statesman or a great "captain of industry," certainly into a great and wise philanthropist. Given such a woman as an inspiration, he might with his strength of mind and self control have won from nothing to a position that would have enabled him to live in some accord with the aspirations that once had illumined his day dreaming.

As it was, he had banished day dreaming from his plan of existence. He had fixed a rigid line of demarcation between right and wrong for the governance of his own conduct that he never permitted himself to overstep, but the failings of others he was prone to condone and ever was ready to stretch forth a hand and help a weakling to set himself straight.

Jimmy occupied two furnished rooms in a small, quiet boarding house. He had lived in the place ever since his arrival in New York, and the only change he had made was to take a private sitting room in addition to his bedroom when his means admitted of it.

"Hello, Jimmy!"

It was here that Brooks found him when late one evening he called there. Jimmy, cigar in mouth, was working at some plans and figures in the light of a reading lamp when Brooks opened the door. He looked up from the table with no evidence of surprise as his visitor entered.

"Hello, Jimmy?"

"Hello."

Smith might have expected him and regarded his presence as an ordinary thing for all the tone of his response to the salutation indicated.

"How have you been all this time?"

"About as usual. How have you been getting on? Take a chair, won't you?"

He did not see the hand that Brooks extended for the reason that he was rolling up the plans that had been stretched before him.

Brooks sat down in the only other armchair, on the same side of the table. On entering he had been very nervous. His customary aplomb revived as he found that Smith was apparently the same old Jimmy.

"Oh, fine," he replied. "Thought I'd just drop in on you and see how things were."

"Thanks. Have a cigar."

Smith pushed the box toward him, and he helped himself to one and lit it. "I feel like I owe an apology for keeping out of the way so long. I suppose you wondered what had become of me."

"I have often wondered."

"Well, you see, I was sort of cut up after the way Emma left me. It was enough to make me feel sore. There was no excuse for it. Then I've been awfully busy. I got a job in a bank as assistant receiving teller at a real living salary. A fellow isn't ground down there, and there's a chance to get on. They treat you like a gentleman, not like a lascar cabin boy. I ought to have quit the Latin-American line long ago. I suppose old Williams is still slave driving."

"Williams is still president of the company."

"Well, he'll get what's coming to him from somebody one of these days."

Smith made no comment.

"Say, Jimmy, you don't give one the impression that the world disagrees with you. You look immense."

"There's never much the matter with me, Brooks."

"Brooks! Why 'Brooks'? What's the matter with Joe? You needn't be so darned ceremonious. You haven't got a grudge against me because I stayed away so long, have you?"

"No grudge whatever."

"Oh, well, let it go. How's the old woman?"

"You mean Mrs. Harris?"

"Who else would I mean except my salubritous mother-in-law?"

"She was well at last reports."

There was another pause in the conversation, and Brooks stared hard at the ceiling.

"I guess you're a fixture here. You wouldn't be happy in any other lodgings," he went on, looking at Jimmy, who was eying him with his usual calm expression that was neither cold nor kind, yet partook, if anything, of kindness. "You ought to see the cute little quarters I have. They're in a bachelor apartment house. I want you to come around one of these evenings. You'll come, won't you?"

"Maybe, one of these odd evenings. We've got to provide accommodations for more boats, and I'm a busy man, so you mustn't bank on me for awhile."

"All right. If that ain't a refusal any evening you can dispose of will suit me. Just let me know you're coming; that's all."

For the hundredth time his eyes wandered to portraits of himself and his wife in a silver stand on the table. They had presented photographs and stand to Smith soon after their marriage.

"You've still got that, I see," he said, indicating it with a nod of the head.

"Of course."

"How is she, by the bye?"

At last he had brought the conversation round to where he wanted it.

"Emma? Oh, she was all right when I last heard about her."

"Heard about her? She's living with her mother, isn't she?"

"Certainly. I haven't seen them for some time. All the family's out of town."

Brooks could not conceal his disappointment.

"Where are they staying? Is it far from the city?"

"Quite some distance."

"Well, where is it? At the seaside? In the country?" he demanded, exasperated. "Why don't you come out with a straight answer instead of dodging? What do you think I am? What do you think I came here for?"

"You said you came to see how I was getting along."

Brooks could have kicked himself for having been betrayed into losing his temper. It was a bad break for a man having a favor to ask.

Notice is hereby given that I, Wm. E. Lloyd, administrator of the estate of John Norton, deceased, have filed with the Probate Court, Wrangell Precinct, District of Alaska, my final account, and the Court has set April 25th, 1910, the day for hearing objections thereto. Therefore, all persons having objections thereto are cited to appear on that date at 2 o'clock p. m., at the Court House at Wrangell, Alaska.

Dated February 24, 1910.

WM. E. LLOYD,

Administrator of the Estate of John Norton, Deceased.

Three degrees above zero is the record for the winter thus far. It was registered on "Dad" Smith's thermometer Tuesday morning. It's not as bad as we read of it being in the east, but it's cold enough.

Word comes from Seattle that Fred Miles who was a passenger down on the Jefferson, stood the trip in good shape.

Reports have it that the winter fur catch up the river is very light. Heavy snows are responsible for the shortage.

Manager O. P. Brown of the Pacific Coast and Norway Packing Co. at Petersburg, was a passenger North on the Humboldt.

Mrs. Wm. Lewis, who has been quite sick, is reported as being somewhat improved.

The unprecedented fall of snow is playing havoc with buildings in the outlying districts. Two are reported collapsed at Ideal Cove.

Mrs. Wm. Fletcher, who has been visiting in the states, is expected home on an early boat.

The cold weather is making the catch of spring salmon so light as to be without profit to either fishermen or buyers.

Charley Kinney, who had been on a trip to the Sound country, was a passenger to Wrangell on the Humboldt, Monday. He reports a very pleasant trip.

Schooner For Sale

The schooner Ragnhild is offered for sale at a reasonable figure. She is 35 feet long, with a beam of 11 ft. 6 inches, and a 9 h. p. Truscott engine. She is thoroughly equipped with sails, rigging, sidelights, anchors and cable, batteries and magneto, air, naphtha and gasoline tanks, whistle, engine tools and cook stove, etc. She is to be seen near the local electric power house, and the price and other particulars can be learned from either Joe Ensley or Orval Palmer.

Washing and ironing, pressing, cleaning and plain sewing at Mrs. Wm. Lewis'.

Louis Levy, representing Joseph Ullmann, the big New York FUR buyer, will spend the winter in Southeastern Alaska, making frequent calls at Wrangell.

Patenaude carries the best in Cigars, Tobaccos, Pipes, and Smokers' supplies in general.

When in need of a tombstone for your departed one, write to the Juneau Marble works, James Hogan, proprietor, Juneau, Alaska. Designs and prices furnished on application

To claimants of land in Wrangell townsite. Time in which to file applications for deeds is extended thirty days from the date of this notice, after which allotments will be made or rejected on all applications on file, and deeds issued on payment of assessments. Contest cases will then be heard, and a report made of all unoccupied lands; lands allotted, assessments remaining unpaid; and lands occupied and not applied for. When the Commissioner of the General Land Office will appoint a time for, and the conditions under which the lands still remaining vacant will be sold at public auction.
